US dollar rises, euro weighed down by inflation data

THE US dollar nudged higher against European peers on Tuesday (Jan 6), with the euro weighed down by softer inflation data, but moves were fairly muted with commodity and stock markets drawing most of the day's attention.

The euro was last down 0.2 per cent at US$1.1699, giving back early small gains after data showed inflation slowed more than expected in Germany and France in December.

That data sent European government bond yields down around three basis points, while Treasury yields were slightly higher on the day, a relative move that weighed on the common currency.

Traders expect the European Central Bank to keep rates steady for all of this year, and if inflation continues to hold near its 2 per cent target, it will have little reason to rush to hike.

The pound dropped in sympathy as traders thought British inflation data could follow a similar pattern, and was last down 0.17 per cent at US$1.13517, albeit after hitting a near four-month high against both the dollar and euro earlier in the day.

The impact of the shock US capture of Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro over the weekend was short-lived across most asset classes and particularly in currencies, while stocks are trading around record highs.

"A little over 48 hours after the US military operation in Venezuela, there are few marks left in the currency market. Early Monday's flight into dollar safety proved very short-lived," said Francesco Pesole, FX analyst at ING.

"The good performance of equities yesterday, despite geopolitical risk, was, in our view, the primary driver of the unwinding of earlier dollar gains," Pesole added.

With the dollar steady on the yen at 156.46, the dollar index, which measures its strength

Expectations of policy easing edged up after his remarks, though Fed funds futures are still pricing around an 80 per cent chance that interest rates will remain on hold at the US central bank's next meeting on January 27 to 28, according to the CME Group's FedWatch tool.

Elsewhere, the Australian dollar, which is sensitive to global investor sentiment and often moves in line with stocks, has been outperforming, and hit an over one-year high of US$0.6739 on Tuesday.

Against the Chinese yuan trading offshore in Hong Kong, the US dollar was last down marginally at 6.983 yuan.

With the optimism around global stocks, the safe-haven Swiss franc struggled.

The dollar was last up 0.18 per cent on the franc at 0.7928. REUTERS
