WHAT would a combined Uber and Grab look like? If there is one thing commuters (and competition authorities) in Singapore fear, it is the merger of ride-hailing giants Uber and Grab. Since 2013, commuters have benefited from an extravagant, venture capital-backed war between the two, enjoying discounted rides and innovative features such as carpool as a result. But all of these could come to an end if Uber does sell its South-east Asian business to Grab, a rumour that surfaced only last month. One thing is clear, a merged Grab and Uber would be a major player in many different walks of life.

The Business Times aggregates and compares their many offerings.
