Greenback nears six-week lows; euro, sterling slip

THE US dollar skimmed six-week lows on Wednesday (Apr 15), having surrendered almost all the gains made since the Iran war erupted, as signs of another round of talks between Washington and Tehran lifted risk appetite.

Teheran has effectively shut the Strait of Hormuz, a crucial waterway for a fifth of global oil and gas shipments, since the US-Israel war with Iran began on Feb 28, sending oil prices surging and igniting concerns about the hit to global growth and inflation.

Washington imposed a blockade on Iranian ports after the collapse of weekend negotiations, but US President Donald Trump said on Tuesday talks to end the war could resume in Pakistan in the coming days. This helped shore up investor confidence enough to cut demand for dollars as a safe haven.

The euro, which has recovered its war-driven losses, was down 0.1 per cent at US$1.177, near its highest since Mar 2. Sterling was also down modestly at US$1.355.

The dollar index, which measures the US currency against six others, is back to where it was at the end of February, having risen by as much as 3 per cent at one point in early March.

Although talks in Islamabad last weekend failed to produce a breakthrough – raising doubts over the durability of a two-week ceasefire that still has a week to run – investors still hope that diplomacy could yet deliver a resolution.

The US dollar emerged as the key beneficiary of safe-haven flows in March, but optimism around a ceasefire and a possible resolution of the conflict has pushed it down nearly 2 per cent this month against other major currencies.

Given the extreme uncertainty of the situation, MUFG currency strategist Lee Hardman said it may be too soon to declare the US dollar's safe-haven appeal to be over.

"In the very near term, we are a bit cautious about chasing the dollar further lower, given that the market appears kind of optimistic now that the worst is behind and things might get back to normal more quickly than is likely," he noted. "I still think there's a risk that the market's underestimating the energy price shock, that it's likely to hit the global economy."

Investor focus is squarely on the extent of the damage to the global economy from the energy shock, not least as prices for physical crude are above US$140 a barrel, even as futures are below US$100 again. The International Monetary Fund cut its growth outlook due to the energy price spike but said the world was already drifting towards a more adverse scenario with much-weaker growth.

Under the IMF's worst-case outlook, the global economy teeters on the brink of recession, with oil prices averaging US$110 a barrel in 2026 and US$125 in 2027.

The Japanese yen, which is still well below pre-war levels, given Japan's exposure to imported energy inflation, was 0.14 per cent weaker at 158.95 against the US dollar on the day.

The surge in oil and natural gas prices has prompted traders to price in the possibility of the European Central Bank and the Bank of England raising rates this year to temper inflation, while bringing even one rate cut from the Federal Reserve into doubt.

Former US Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen sees one interest rate cut by the Fed as possible this year, even as the supply shocks from the war could put pressure on inflation. "Short-term inflation expectations are up slightly, but they're going to watch all of that very carefully, and I think they have an open mind," she told the HSBC Global Investment Summit in Hong Kong on Wednesday.
