

Wanted: New normal

Business leaders say challenges ensue as S'pore embarks on next half of the century

Restructure or die

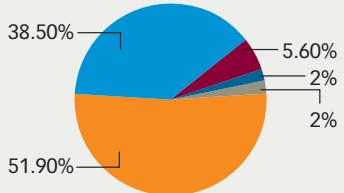

Beyond 2020, do you think Singapore's economy will grow rapidly again?

- It depends on whether Singapore restructures successfully
- Yes, the slower growth profile is only temporary
- No, the days of Singapore's strong growth are long past
- I don't know, the future is too uncertain
- It depends on whether the external economy picks up

Diversity good for growth

Globalisation and increasing talent mobility will make Singapore more diverse than ever in the past. Is this a positive development?

- Yes, it is essential for economic growth
- Yes, it is the mark of an enlightened global city
- No, Singapore is too crowded as it is
- I don't know
- No, it would change the essence of Singapore

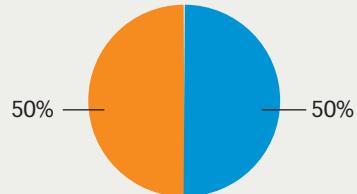

Singapore defined

What do you think are the three most important features that define Singapore?

Can this generation do better?

One hallmark of the Singapore story is the way each generation has been able to better itself from the one before. But with the country's slowing growth, rising cost of living, and changing demographics, some think this is no longer a given for successive generations. Do you agree?

- Yes, it is becoming harder for Singaporeans to surpass the previous generation's achievements
- No, I have confidence that Singaporeans will be able to surpass the previous generation's achievements