He added that the market will also be awaiting Nvidia's earnings on Wednesday.

Innes noted that the technology company's closely-watched earnings print is now being treated like a central bank-level event for global risk beta.

US dollar climbs as investors eye data deluge

WORLD currency markets started the week in a cautious mood with the dollar just a touch higher on the euro, yen and sterling, as traders fine-tuned their positioning ahead of what could be a busy week with the long-awaited return of US economic data.

Market reaction to US President Donald Trump's tariff U-turn on more than 200 food products was muted, with some analysts saying the move was not a surprise due to the cost-of-living issues caused by the levies.

The focus this week will be on various US data releases for clues on the health of the world's largest economy, with the closely watched September nonfarm payrolls report due on Thursday (Nov 20).

Despite signs of further weakness in the US economy from recent private-sector data, investors have trimmed expectations of a Fed cut next month, betting that gaps in economic data will delay or even derail further easing.

Markets are now pricing in just over a 40 per cent chance of a 25-basis-point rate cut in December, down from more than 60 per cent earlier this month.

And Goldman Sachs currency analysts cautioned in their week ahead note that while this week at least offers some data, it is not going to be the most helpful.

"Even though the shutdown has come to an end, it will naturally take some time for data to be relevant again. (Thursday's) payrolls report for example will be a snapshot from two months ago, and therefore unlikely to settle any debates about the outlook," they said.

In the medium term however, they think the incoming data will "show enough downside risks to the labour market to settle the swirling debate within the FOMC (the Fed's rate-setting committee)". They think this process will be negative for the dollar. Market moves ahead of that were fairly muted.

The euro was down 0.2 per cent on the dollar at US$1.5977, the pound was just a fraction weaker at US$1.3168, while the yen was also a fraction softer at 154.73 to the greenback.

The yen hardly reacted to data on Monday that showed Japan's economy shrank an annualised 1.8 per cent in the three months through September, as a drop in exports in the first contraction in six quarters.

The Japanese currency, does however, remain near a nine-month low against the dollar, leaving traders alert to the threat of intervention from Japanese authorities to stem the yen's decline.

Japan last intervened in the currency market in July 2024 when the yen fell to a 38-year low of around 161.96 to the dollar, as currency weakness stoked sharp food and fuel price inflation.

While sterling was steadier on Monday, it remained near the top of mind for currency traders after British assets saw a whirlwind Friday session as speculation swirled around the British government's highly anticipated Nov 26 budget.

This speculation is likely to continue, though the pound will also be influenced by British economic data this week, most notably monthly inflation data.

A cooler-than-expected inflation print for September sparked a shift in pricing for the Bank of England, and sent the pound lower, when it was released last month.
